The term "Kethara" loosely translates to "offering" or "sacred vessel", indicating the ritualistic offerings made during the vratham (vow).

The vratham is usually performed on the day of Gowri Habba or Gowri Vratam, which varies according to regional lunar calendars but generally falls in the months of August or September. The practice is widespread in Tamil Nadu, Karnataka, and Andhra Pradesh, with slight variations in customs and rituals based on local traditions.

Mythological Significance and Historical Context

The legend behind kethara gowri vratham is rooted in Hindu mythology, where Goddess Gowri is venerated as an embodiment of Shakti, the divine feminine energy. According to traditional narratives, the vratham commemorates the penance and devotion of Goddess Gowri to win Lord Shiva's favor. The story emphasizes virtues such as patience, perseverance, and unwavering faith.

Historically, this ritual has been a means for women to invoke the goddess's blessings for marital harmony and to seek protection from adversities. The vratham is also believed to bestow progeny and safeguard the family from negative influences.
